Carter again vows grain embargo ban

By Jim Wisuri
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Asking for a "personal" and "sacrificial commitment" from the thousands of people gathered in the Free Forum, Jimmy Carter reaffirmed his own commitment Tuesday to stop grain embargoes.

In a 10 minute speech delivered over, and at times drowned out by the exhortations of an Indiana evangelist seated in a tree behind the speakers platform, Carter railed against the evils of a Republican administration and promised, "There will never be another grain embargo while, Jimmy Carter is in the White House."

Carter delivered no new statements as had been hinted at by his advance man, Dan Lee, relying instead on his standard indictments of the last eight years of Republicans in the White House—unprecedented high numbers of unemployed, a rising national deficit, and American military and intelligence atrocities in Cambodia, Chile, and Angola, and at home.

American people have been excluded from the process of government "by the wall built around Washington" by the Republicans, Carter said.

"You came to this rally because you believe in our country. Let's fight together, OK?" he asked in his second campaign appearance of the day.

Carter's first stop Tuesday morning was at Columbia, S. C. as he headed into the final week. He was scheduled to appear at the Quad Cities airport and the Chicago area later Tuesday.

He was joined on the podium by Democratic leaders, U.S. Sen. Adlai Stevenson, U.S. Rep. Paul Simon, Gov. Daniel Walker, gubernatorial candidate Michael Howlett, State Sens. Gene Johns and Ken Buzbee, State Reps. Clyde Choate and Bruce Richmond, and James Holloway, state central committeeman for the 24th district.

President Warren Brandt and George Mace, vice-president for university relations, escorted the Georgia Democrat to the stage. Mace and Bruce Swinburne, vice-president for student affairs, joined Carter on the podium.

The Free Forum area, south of Anthony Hall, was almost full for the speech, according to Bob Harris, assistant director of campus security. Harris said if the people who were perched in trees, standing on the U.S. 51 overpass the Parking Garage, and in the bleachers of McAndrew Stadium across the street, had all squeezed into the Free Forum, the area might have been filled.

Campus security estimated that between 12,000 and 15,000 people attended. Most were students.

The crowd was generally receptive to Carter chanting "We want Carter" as he approached the stage. After he was introduced by Gov. Walker, the chanting started again. "You got me," he replied, beaming the tooth grin which has become his trademark.

Walker and Howlett were both booed by the audience when introduced before Carter.

When Carter first greeted the crowd from the stage, he in turn, was greeted by some flying peanuts from the audience directly in front of the podium.

Supporters of President Ford, independent candidate Eugene McCarthy, and libertarian candidate Roger MacBride demonstrated at the speech, but none had the impact of the booming voice of repentance from behind the stage.

Sources close to the Carter campaign said the incessant heckling of Max Lynch, an evangelist preacher from Terre Haute, Ind., might have been the reason Carter shortened the scheduled 30 minutes address to ten minutes.

Voice from treetop exhorts rally: "Repent!"

By H.B. Koplowitz
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Many who attended the Jimmy Carter rally at the Free Forum Tuesday were treated to a dose of old time religion, but it was not coming from the Democratic candidate.

As Carter opened his mouth to speak, a nattily dressed man, perched in a tree overlooking the stage, began to berate the candidate and the crowd.

The man was Max Lynch, 47, an evangelist preacher from Terre Haute, Ind. A source close to the Carter campaign said that Lynch's performance may have been a factor in Carter's cutting a scheduled thirty-minute address to a ten-minute speech.

Lynch said he is the pastor of a church in Terre Haute. He said he had been fired from a teaching job at Indiana State University for reading the Bible during class.

A call to Indiana State University confirmed Lynch's story. A senior clerk in the liberal arts department who refused to give her name taught high school math at the University lab school from 1961 to 1971.

She described his classroom behavior as "hell fire and brimstone down on your knees." She added that although she was not certain why he was fired, parents of children in his classes had complained about religion in the classroom. The secretary said that she had heard that Lynch had been thrown off the Georgia Tech campus, and that he often preaches in Terre Haute.

She said he does not belong to an organized church, but that he founded his own church in the town.

Carter finished his speech and left with his entourage of Secret Service personnel, leaving the man to find his own way down the tree, which as it turned out, was a hazardous journey.

Two unidentified individuals, a man and woman, climbed up the tree after the man, while an angry heckling crowd of several hundred waited below. The man climbed up above Lynch and attempted to loosen the preacher's grasp to a limb. The woman grabbed Lynch's coat with both hands (not holding onto the tree with anything), and began to tug strenuously. The crowd below egged them on with shouts of "jump," as the press photographers tried to get a better angle to take pictures.

After about ten minutes, several police showed up and ordered the three out of the tree. Lynch was whisked behind closed doors at Anthony Hall while the man and woman melted into the crowd.

Lynch said the reason he was up a tree was because it gave him a good vantage point from which to speak and to see Carter.

'Good grade' is reason for fire

By Ann Schottman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

John P. Carey, the student who set himself on fire in a speech class Monday, was discharged from the SIU Health Service Tuesday and intends to return to classes Wednesday.

Carey, a sophomore in accounting, poured gasoline over himself and set himself on fire as an introduction for a speech in a public speaking class in the Wham Building.

Carey said Tuesday that he "just wanted to get a good grade." He said he thought the act would be a good introduction to his speech on "what to do when a person catches fire."

Undaunted by the activity his flaming introduction created, Carey went ahead and gave his speech, which lasted about two minutes. He then walked out of the class and went to the Health Service for treatment.

Carey said that his doctor told him his burns will take about five days to heal.

Carey started the fire in the hall outside the classroom by pouring gasoline on the front of the overalls he was wearing and setting a match to it.

Carey said a woman from another class saw Carey set himself on fire. She started screaming and "raced out and pulled the fire alarm." Carey said she was the one that "caused all the commotion." He said the fire was out by the time the alarm was answered.

Carey said he splashed "just a little" gasoline on himself. "I didn't use a whole can like some of the newspapers said I did. I used some sense, but not much."

The fire was put out with a sheet and some curtains, Carey said. A fire extinguisher was not used. By the time someone brought an extinguisher to the classroom door, the fire was already out.

A friend of Carey's, Mike "Mur" Maryarski, was standing by with a wet sheet to put out the fire. "That helped some, but not much," Maryarski said. Then Carey pulled some curtains down to wrap around himself.

"Then one of the guys in the class tackled me and pulled me down to the floor and wrapped the sheet around us. That pretty well put the fire out, and then they packed the curtains around me," Carey said. About two or three other members of the class helped put the fire out, he said. The other members of the class were "shocked" and were milling about, Maryarski said.

"A few people in the class got excited and a few knew what to do and didn't panic," Carey said.

When Carey first walked into the class on fire, members of the class "yelled and screamed," Maryarski said. He said the teacher, Ricardo de la Piedra, was "shaking as bad as we were."

Coal group says yes to gasification plants

By Steve Bauman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Four proponents of coal conversion agreed Tuesday that coal gasification was one of the most efficient methods of Illinois coal use.

At the morning session of the "The Promise and Challenge of Coal Conversion" the speakers concurred that Illinois has a large amount of known coal reserves, (more than 65 billion tons) but said most of the coal mined in Illinois has a relatively high sulfur content.

The group agreed that coal gasification or liquefaction are the most effective methods available to minimize the polluting effects of high sulfur coal without drastically reducing the burning efficiency.

Two gasification plants are planned for Southern Illinois. The managers of both proposed sites spoke to more than 75 persons attending the program, sponsored by the Student Environmental Center.

George Koehler, site activities manager for the New Athens Facility and R.J. Eby, general manager of the Illinois Coal Gasification Group (ICGG) said the coal gasification plants they represent will have a beneficial economical effect on the areas where they will be built. ICGG is a coalition of five Illinois power companies.

Also speaking were Roland Beck, acting director of the Division of Coal Gasification and Utilization, U.S. Energy Research and Development Agency (ERDA) and Harold Gluskoter, geologist and director of the Coal Section for the Illinois State Geological Survey.

The ICGG plant, to be built about 15 miles southeast of Pinckneyville, will provide jobs for local residents, create new tax revenues and will generate new business for the area, Eby said.

Eby explained that the ICGG project is still in the negotiating stages with ERDA and that construction is not scheduled to begin until early 1979.

Flaming student had been in volunteer fire department

De la Piedra did not know that the fire was part of Carey's speech, Carey said. After the fire was put out, de la Piedra told Carey that he did not have to give his speech that day. When Carey did give his speech, de la Piedra was out in the hall and did not hear it because he was "trying to explain to the other classes what was going on."

Most of the newspaper reports were "pretty distorted," Carey said. "My parents heard the whole story 300 miles north of here and the news made it sound like I was some kind of radical. I knew the story would never get straight unless someone talked to me."

Carey said he was sorry the Associated Press had picked up the story because "people that don't know the whole story will think I'm a sickie." Then he added ruefully, "People that do know the whole story are going to think I'm a sickie."

Carey said he did not have on any underwear under the overalls, which is why he got burned. He did not get any burns on his chest or back because he had on a shirt which kept the flames from reaching his skin.

Carey said he was taken to the Health Service by the Carbondale fire rescue van, which had responded to the fire

Completion of the demonstration plant at the Pinckneyville site is scheduled for 1982. The New Athens plant construction is to begin in 1978 and completion is planned for 1981.

Cost of the gasification plants will be shared by the companies and ERDA. Eby predicted the Pinckneyville plant will cost approximately $267 million.

Coalton is an independent corporation.

Eby said all gas produced from the Pinckneyville plant will be used by existing power plants in the state.

He said that since the gas will not be leaving the state, it will not be subject to Federal Power Commission regulations which set a ceiling on natural gas prices. Natural gas crossing state lines must be sold for no more than $1.42 a cubic foot.

Eby predicted that gas produced from the coal gasification plants will cost more than $2 per cubic foot.

Both plants will be set up free of any water run off. Eby explained that the water used by his plant (which will be piped in from the Mississippi River) will be recycled until it evaporates or forms solid waste.

The solid waste will be dumped into a nearby strip mining site and used to aid in the reclamation of the site.

The high sulfur content in the Illinois coal proves to be an added asset, Koehler explained. He said the sulfur through the gasification process is extracted from the coal and then can be sold at a profit for use in fertilizers.

Both plants will be built on former strip mining sites.

Gluskoter told the group that coal available for strip mining in Illinois is declining, but coal available through underground mining is still plentiful.

"Illinois coal is very minable; it's thick, and runs in a relatively continuous and straight line," Gluskoter said.

He said Illinois coal generally has a moderate ash content, but a high sulfur content.

alarm. "The driver was pretty nice about it, considering he didn't know what was going on. I just walked out and jumped in the truck and said 'Get going. Take me to the hospital. I'm burned.' He said, 'From what, steam?' and I said, 'No, gas.'"

One of Carey's friends said, "Pretty good action for a member of a volunteer fire department, huh?"

Carey has been a volunteer in the fire department in his home town, Seatonville, for about a year, he said. He has helped them extinguish fires, he said, although he did not get the idea for the speech from any fire department activities.

He said he first thought up the idea about three weeks ago, when he and some friends were discussing a party where a football player walked in with his clothes on fire. Carey said he did not know what happened to the man.

Carey only told a couple of his friends about his plans, he said. "I didn't advertise it." Maryarski said he tried to talk Carey out of the idea before class.

Carey emphasized that he did the act with serious intentions and did not intend it as a protest or stunt.

Arabs endorse Lebanon peace plan

CAIRO (AP)—Arab leaders endorsed a peace plan for Lebanon at the end of a twoday summit conference Tuesday but failed to agree on the key issue of whose troops should serve in a 30,000-member force. The dispute centers around Syria's demand that the 21,000 Syrian soldiers already in Lebanon form the bulk of pan-Arab peace force. This was rejected by Iraq, which has been feuding with Syria, and opposed by the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO). Iraq has demanded that all Syrian troops be withdrawn from Lebanon, while the PLO fears that Syria is trying to gain control over the Palestinian guerrilla units.

Resolutions approved at the summit meeting rejected the partition of Lebanon into Christian and Moslem states, vowed to respect Lebanon's sovereignty and protect the Palestinian guerrilla movement, and called on each Arab state to contribute to the reconstruction of Lebanon. The leaders also urged observance of a 1969 agreement that allowed the Palestinians to attack Israel from staging areas in southern Lebanon.

Britain backs black leaders Rhodesia plan

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Britain backed the demands of Rhodesia's black leaders Tuesday for the release of hundreds of political prisoners they claim are held without trial in the white-ruled country. The action by the British chairman of Rhodesia conference, Ivor Richard, came after Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe insisted they want immediate freedom for an estimated 600 political prisoners and detainees held for their opposition to the white rulers of the breakaway British colony.

An end of what they called "genocide and massacre" of Zimbabweans, the black name for Rhodesians.

U.N. condemns Transkei; U.S. abstains alone

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—The General Assembly voted 134-0 Tuesday for a resolution condemning the "sham independence" of Transkei and asking all nations to shun diplomatic and economic links with South Africa's black offspring. The United States was alone in abstaining. The United States said it was against South Africa's apartheid and tribal homelands policies, and would not recognize Transkei, but abstained because of certain provisions and "very loose language" in the resolution.

Not present for the vote were Bolivia, Honduras, Paraguay, Uruguay, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Lebanon, the Seychelles and Surinam. South Africa's credentials were rejected by the 1974 General Assembly and it has not returned since. The resolution was passed at the beginning of the annual assembly debate on apartheid, the South African policy of racial separation.

Ford says his White House isn't 'imperial'

CHICAGO (AP)—President Ford said Tuesday night that a fundamental difference between his presidency and that of his predecessor, Richard Nixon, is that Ford does not have an "imperial White House." The President was asked on an Illinois statewide television show how his administration differs from Nixon's. "There is one very, very fundamental difference," Ford replied. "Under President Ford there is not an imperial White House."

Nixon tapes cleared by court for broadcasting

By Harry F. Rosenthal
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Court of Appeals cleared the way Tuesday for broadcasting of the Nixon White House tapes played at the Watergate cover-up trial.

"The tapes played at trial are no longer confidential," the court ruled in a 2-1 decision.

The ruling also permits the sale of the tapes as phonograph records.

Included is the so-called "smoking gun" tape of June 23, 1972, when former President Richard M. Nixon ordered that the FBI's investigation of the Watergate break-in, six days earlier, be halted.

Also among the tapes played at the trial is the March 21, 1973 warning, by former Nixon counsel John Dean, that there was a cancer on the presidency.

The three television networks, the Public Broadcasting System, a news directors' organization and Warner Communications, Inc., a manufacturer of phonograph records, had asked to reproduce the tapes.

Initially, U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell had ruled that could be done, provided the applicants came up with a plan to prevent commercialization or unauthorized use. Later he reviewed proposals and found them unacceptable. U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, who presided over the cover-up trial, then denied the applications, saying any such action had to wait until appeals were exhausted by the four men convicted in the case, John N. Mitchell, H. R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and Robert C. Mardian.

The appeals court recently upheld the convictions of all except Mardian, but all have said they would carry the appeals process to the Supreme Court.

Involved are 30 tapes played during the three-month trial. Transcripts of the tapes were published in whole or in part while the trial was in progress.

The opinion, written by Chief Judge David L. Bazelon, said that by definition the tapes are no longer confidential and that Nixon, who opposes their release, "is left to argue that it somehow would be 'unseemly' to allow tapes of White House conversations to be marketed and publicly distributed."

But, said Bazelon, "this is essentially a question of taste and provides a singularly weak basis for a court to interfere with the exercise of a long-established common law right."

"In any event, in light of the strong interests underlying the common law right to inspect judicial records — interests especially important here given the national concern over Watergate, we cannot say that Judge Gesell abused his discretion."

Jimmy Carter rally gets mixed emotions

By Gail Wagner

Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Curiosity may have killed the cat, but it didn't hurt Jimmy Carter, Democratic presidential candidate, too much Tuesday, judging from a sampling of onlookers at the noon rally in the Free Forum Area.

Most of the spectators asked, said "curiosity" was their primary reason for attending. "I never saw anybody who was going to be President," said Robert Wallwin, junior in industrial technology, who admitted he is still an undecided voter.

Mark Palmquist, sophomore in accounting, attended the rally because of Carter's "notoriety," and said he already had heard everything he had to say.

After seeing President Ford at Williamson County Airport last spring, Bob Saltzman, graduate student in higher education, decided "to give Carter equal time." Saltzman said he was "kinda disappointed in it, I expected more dynamism."

George Sweeney, senior in social welfare, wanted to "get close to feel his vibes," which he said didn't impress him. He added that he wasn't voting for any presidential candidate in order to "separate myself from the insanity."

Some onlookers, such as Dean Christianson, sophomore in political science, "wanted to hear his side," and were "disappointed he didn't say anything."

Other students took the emotional roots of the rally into consideration. Helen Malina, undecided sophomore, said although she thought Carter "didn't say much," she understood that was due to the inherent purpose of a political rally.

Two Carter supporters, psychology professor Thomas Schill and his wife, Liz, said they had seen the 1972 Democratic candidate for president, George McGovern, when he brought his campaign to Southern Illinois Airport. Their only complaint about the Carter rally was "we wished they'd had it in a different place" than the Free Forum Area.

What prompted Dave Lucht, senior in art, to attend the rally? Was it curiosity or political preference? "I had a break in between classes. Otherwise I don't think I would have gone," he said.

Economy is good if you think it is

By Arthur Hoppe
of Chronicle Features Syndicate

Like all Presidents, Mr. Ford keeps going around saying how the economy is going to get better and better. It's as though he thought saying it was so might make it so. Well, he's right.

The only thing wrong with the economy is that hardly anyone understands it.

Economists understand it least of all. That's why their predictions are usually wrong. Their trouble is they think of the economy as a recalcitrant beast driven by mysterious forces, seized by unfathomable moods, smashing through psychological barriers to destroy the innocent in order to fulfill its strange, secret desires.

Nonsense! The truth is the economy happens to be the most obedient, obsequious, downright-fawning creature imaginable. The little-known First Law of Economics captures its personality perfectly:

The economy always does precisely what everybody thinks it will do.

At the moment, for example, we are plagued with inflation and unemployment, even though economists had long held you couldn't have both at the same time.

The reason we have both, of course, is that everybody thought we'd have both. And the economy dutifully responded.

"Hey!" everybody said. "This inflation is awful. What's the sense of sticking my paycheck in the bank when it won't be worth a hill of beans in a couple of years? Let's live it up instead and buy a loaf of bread—before the price goes sky high. Toujours gai, toujours gai."

Naturally, the price of bread went sky high. Just as everybody thought it would.

At the same time, however, everybody was worried about unemployment. "Let's buy a new car," everybody's wife suggested. "I lost the old one at the supermarket."

"Are you out of your mind?" asked everybody. "The way the economy's going, I could be out of a job tomorrow."

So everybody avoided buying a new car. The auto companies almost went under. Auto workers were laid off in droves. Unemployment soared. Just as everybody thought it would.

The First Law of Economics is infallible. If everybody thinks business will be bad, they renege. And business is bad. If they think it will be good, they expand. And it's good. If everybody thinks stocks are going up, they buy stocks. And stocks go up. If everybody thinks the bubble gum bubble is about to burst, they sell bubble gum futures. And bang!

So Mr. Ford, though he may never have heard of the First Law, is quite right in trying to spread optimism. That way lies riches and prosperity for all.

We need only have faith in our President, faith in our economy, faith in the future so that we can march off, heads high, to go confidently in hock for a new car. It's as simple as that.

You go first.

Ford's plea to sacrifice for military wrong

In the third debate with Jimmy Carter, President Ford was asked what sacrifices the people should be prepared to make in case he were elected President.

In reply, President Ford said the people should be prepared to make sacrifices for the military and for holding the lid on spending.

The people are well aware that sacrificing for the military means spending more of our tax money for military weapons. So holding the lid on spending does not mean, for Ford, military spending, but instead it means holding the lid on spending for the personal goods and services which are needed by the people for their own welfare.

The Ford Fallacies are self-

evident.

Sacrifice for military weaponry means lack of trust between nations and consequently the continuation of the armaments race, for no nation in relating to other nations as possible enemies is satisfied with a mere balance of military power. The root fallacy in the Ford-Kissinger administration is the acceptance of untrustworthiness as the basic principle on which to operate foreign policy without understanding that untrustworthiness is a contagious disease which destroys both governments and people.

When the people awaken to the fact that they must elect representatives who will operate

both domestic and foreign policies from the basic principle of trustworthiness (which is even more contagious than untrustworthiness because trustworthiness is not self-defeating and self-destructive but freedom-giving), the people can then become less fearful, less frustrated, less dependent on military weaponry, with less mental and organic illness, and more secure in their effort to develop a good life on this planet.

Housing cafeterias kept bug-free as possible

This letter is in reference to the insect problem at the food service areas at SIU (Trueblood Hall, Grinnell Hall and Lentz Hall).

It should be made clear to the on-campus housing students that the pest control operation on this campus is detailed and extensive, entailing state licensing and Environmental Protection Agency regulation of all pesticides used.

The food service buildings are sprayed on a scheduled basis, which includes spraying the kitchen and dining areas at least once a week, also food storage rooms, locker rooms and snack bars. However, with the amount of traffic coming in and out of the buildings and students propping doors open, a "Welcome" sign is left for flies. As for the roaches, the problem lies in the fact that they are slipped in when deliveries are made. The insects have a tendency to take residence inside shipping containers and once the carton is placed in the store rooms, the roaches are free to roam.

We combat the fly problem by fogging all the food service buildings and spraying pesticides to keep the roach problem under control.

The EPA regulations limit the amount of chemicals used in a food service operation. This is keeping in mind the students and health and well-being at all times. Also, the new EPA law requires that all spraying of pesticides be done under direct supervision of a state licensed applicator.

If the question arises in the minds of students, "Why don't we see these people spraying?" the answer is, this office is, as are many University offices, limited in time. Thus, much of the spraying is done at night when food service areas are closed.

It is the hope of the people of this department that this letter has shed some light on the pest problem. This office is doing everything possible to keep the health and safety standards high. Further questions should be directed to Housing Safety office.

Socialist Workers Party offers alternatives

Probably the most interesting aspect of the current election campaign, and the most revealing as far as what Ford and Carter have to offer, are the millions of people who will choose not to vote. An estimated 70 million, reflecting a profound distrust and sense of alienation, will not cast their ballots this year.

Carter calls these people cowards and the so-called experts express alarm at this "disturbing trend." But what really alarms those with a stake in the "Two-party system" is the growing recognition that the Democrats and Republicans offer no solutions to the problems facing the majority of people, who work for a living, and who want an answer to the problems of racism, sexism, unemployment, war, high prices, and poverty.

What is wrong with the Democratic and Republican parties is that they are parties of big business, by big business, and for big business. The subservience of these parties to the banks and corporations, to keep their profits high, is at the heart of the policies of both parties. The profit system needs racism and discrimination against women. They need cutbacks in public spending on necessary social services. They need unemployment and price hikes. And they need reactionary regimes in southern Africa, Asia, and Latin America to protect U.S. overseas investments and military outposts.

Even Eugene McCarthy's "independent" campaign is not really so far apart from Ford and Carter. McCarthy says "We do not need a revolution of rising expectations...We need one of moderating expectations—and of responsible management of the economy." In other words, learn to live with lower wages, higher prices, fewer jobs, and closed-down hospitals. McCarthy advocates wage and "price" controls, while take-home pay is already lagging far behind living costs. Past experience proves that wage controls are strictly enforced, while prices and profits continue to climb. The independence of his campaign becomes clear just by examining his cabinet choices: two current Ford appointees, a former Nixon Cabinet member, two corporate presidents, and Mayor Kevin White for attorney general, whose job would include enforcing court-ordered school desegregation which, in Boston, he has attempted to undermine.

The only real alternative is the Socialist Workers campaign of Peter Camejo and Willie Mae Reid.

They aim to build the independent political action of blacks, women, and all working people to achieve their rights. The experience of history shows that only mass, independent action can achieve any basic change: from women earning the right to vote, to the destruction of the Jim Crow system, the right to organize unions, the antiwar movement, the present need for a broad movement in defense of ERA, the right to abortion, and the right of blacks to achieve equal education. For those who want to vote against war, against cutbacks, against racism, and against the oppression of women, vote for Peter Camejo and Willie Mae Reid of the Socialist Workers Party.

Priorities questioned at CCHS

A great big hearty congratulations to our illustrious Board of Education of Carbondale Community High School. It is very comforting and reassuring to realize that our administrators are of the caliber which justified salary increases ranging from 2 per cent to over 8 per cent. Many of us, who are "just" teachers, received a whopping 1 per cent increase for school year 1976-77.

Another congratulatory note is due our Board for their tremendous values and priorities recently exemplified by the construction of an elaborate outhouse which will be utilized at least fifteen or twenty times each year. Then, there is the little matter of a school librarian. Whoever heard of having a school librarian for an attendance center which has only about a thousand students? We all know that athletic trainers and other such necessities must come first. We don't even have punch pins for the Kuder General Interest Survey, but we can spend about a quarter of a million on administration and supervision.

So sharpen your fiscal knives, folks, and let's get on with the "cuts". Remember, don't let teachers and sound educational priorities interfere with your decisions. The administration and the Board of Education took about seven years to dig the financial hole we are now in. The greatest way to solve the dilemma is to form another committee, draw in outside expertise, and then do what your game plan originally called for.

Economy is good if you think it is

By Arthur Hoppe
of Chronicle Features Syndicate

Like all Presidents, Mr. Ford keeps going around saying how the economy is going to get better and better. It's as though he thought saying it was so might make it so. Well, he's right.

The only thing wrong with the economy is that hardly anyone understands it.

Economists understand it least of all. That's why their predictions are usually wrong. Their trouble is they think of the economy as a recalcitrant beast driven by mysterious forces, siezed by unfathomable moods, smashing through psychological barriers to destroy the innocent in order to fulfill its strange, secret desires.

Nonsense! The truth is the economy happens to be the most obedient, obsequious, downright-fawning creature imaginable. The little-known First Law of Economics captures its personality perfectly:

The economy always does precisely what everybody thinks it will do.

At the moment, for example, we are plagued with inflation and unemployment, even though economists had long held you couldn't have both at the same time.

The reason we have both, of course, is that everybody thought we'd have both. And the economy dutifully responded.

"Hey!" everybody said. "This inflation is awful. What's the sense of sticking my paycheck in the bank when it won't be worth a hill of beans in a couple of years? Let's live it up instead and buy a loaf of bread—before the price goes sky high. Toujours gai, toujours gai."

Naturally, the price of bread went sky high. Just as everybody thought it would.

At the same time, however, everybody was worried about unemployment. "Let's buy a new car," everybody's wife suggested. "I lost the old one at the supermarket."

"Are you out of your mind?" asked everybody. "The way the economy's going, I could be out of a job tomorrow."

So everybody avoided buying a new car. The auto companies almost went under. Auto workers were laid off in droves. Unemployment soared. Just as everybody thought it would.

The First Law of Economics is infallible. If everybody thinks business will be bad, they retrench. And business is bad. If they think it will be good, they expand. And it's good. If everybody thinks stocks are going up, they buy stocks. And stocks go up. If everybody thinks the bubble gum bubble is about to burst, they sell bubble gum futures. And bang!

So Mr. Ford, though he may never have heard of the First Law, is quite right in trying to spread optimism. That way lies riches and prosperity for all.

We need only have faith in our President, faith in our economy, faith in the future so that we can march off, heads high, to go confidently in hock for a new car. It's as simple as that.

You go first.

Ford's plea to sacrifice for military wrong

In the third debate with Jimmy Carter, President Ford was asked what sacrifices the people should be prepared to make in case he were elected President.

In reply, President Ford said the people should be prepared to make sacrifices for the military and for holding the lid on spending.

The people are well aware that sacrificing for the military means spending more of our tax money for military weapons. So holding the lid on spending does not mean, for Ford, military spending, but instead it means holding the lid on spending for the personal goods and services which are needed by the people for their own welfare.

The Ford Fallacies are self-

evident.

Sacrifice for military weaponry means lack of trust between nations and consequently the continuation of the armaments race, for no nation in relating to other nations as possible enemies is satisfied with a mere balance of military power. The root fallacy in the Ford-Kissinger administration is the acceptance of untrustworthiness as the basic principle on which to operate foreign policy without understanding that untrustworthiness is a contagious disease which destroys both governments and people.

When the people awaken to the fact that they must elect representatives who will operate

both domestic and foreign policies from the basic principle of trustworthiness, (which is even more contagious than untrustworthiness because trustworthiness is not self-defeating and self-destructive but freedom-giving), the people can then become less fearful, less frustrated, less dependent on military weaponry, with less mental and organic illness, and more secure in their effort to develop a good life on this planet.

Housing cafeterias kept bug-free as possible

This letter is in reference to the insect problem at the food service areas at SIU (Trueblood Hall, Grinnell Hall and Lentz Hall).

It should be made clear to the on-campus housing students that the pest control operation on this campus is detailed and extensive, entailing state licensing and Environmental Protection Agency regulation of all pesticides used.

The food service buildings are sprayed on a scheduled basis, which includes spraying the kitchen and dining areas at least once a week, also food storage rooms, locker rooms and snack bars. However, with the amount of traffic coming in and out of the buildings and students propping doors open, a "Welcome" sign is left for flies. As for the roaches, the problem lies in the fact that they are slipped in when deliveries are made. The insects have a tendency to take residence inside shipping containers and once the carton is placed in the store rooms, the roaches are free to roam.

We combat the fly problem by fogging all the food service buildings and spraying pesticides to keep the roach problem under control.

The EPA regulations limit the amount of chemicals used in a food service operation. This is keeping in mind the students and health and well-being at all times. Also, the new EPA law requires that all spraying of pesticides be done under direct supervision of a state licensed applicator.

If the question arises in the minds of students, "Why don't we see these people spraying?" the answer is, this office is, as are many University offices, limited in time. Thus, much of the spraying is done at night when food service areas are closed.

It is the hope of the people of this department that this letter has shed some light on the pest problem. This office is doing everything possible to keep the health and safety standards high. Further questions should be directed to Housing Safety office.

Socialist Workers Party offers alternatives

Probably the most interesting aspect of the current election campaign, and the most revealing as far as what Ford and Carter have to offer, are the millions of people who will choose not to vote. An estimated 70 million, reflecting a profound distrust and sense of alienation, will not cast their ballots this year.

Carter calls these people cowards and the so-called experts express alarm at this "disturbing trend."

But who really alarms those with a stake in the "two-party system" is the growing recognition that the Democrats and Republicans offer no solutions to the problems facing the majority of people, who work for a living, and who want an answer to the problems of racism, sexism, unemployment, war, high prices, and poverty.

What is wrong with the Democratic and Republican parties is that they are parties of big business, by big business, and for big business. The subservience of these parties to the banks and corporations, to keep their profits high, is at the heart of the policies of both parties. The profit system needs racism and discrimination against women. They need cutbacks in public spending on necessary social services. They need unemployment and price hikes. And they need reactionary regimes in southern Africa, Asia, and Latin America to protect U.S. overseas investments and military outposts.

Even Eugene McCarthy's "independent" campaign is not really so far apart from Ford and Carter. McCarthy says "We do not need a revolution of rising expectations... We need one of moderating expectations—and of responsible management of the economy." In other words, learn to live with lower wages, higher prices, fewer jobs, and closed-down hospitals. McCarthy advocates wage and "price" controls, while take-home pay is already lagging far behind living costs. Past experience proves that wage controls are strictly enforced, while prices and profits continue to climb. The independence of his campaign becomes clear just by examining his cabinet choices; two current Ford appointees, a former Nixon Cabinet member, two corporation presidents, and Mayor Kevin White for attorney general, whose job would include enforcing court-ordered school desegregation which, in Boston, he has attempted to undermine.

The only real alternative is the Socialist Workers campaign of Peter Camejo and Willie Mae Reid.

They aim to build the independent political action of blacks, women, and all working people to achieve their rights. The experience of history shows that only mass, independent action can achieve any basic change: from women earning the right to vote, to the destruction of the Jim Crow system, the right to organize unions, the antiwar movement, the present need for a broad movement in defense of ERA, the right to abortion, and the right of blacks to achieve equal education. For those who want to end the war, against cutbacks, against racism, and against the oppression of women, vote for Peter Camejo and Willie Mae Reid of the Socialist Workers Party.

Priorities questioned at CCHS

A great big hearty congratulations to our illustrious Board of Education of Carbondale Community High School. It is very comforting and reassuring to realize that our administrators of the caliber which justified salary increases ranging from 2 per cent to over 8 per cent. Carter came, saw and conquered. . .nothing

By James Santori and Robert Wren
Editorial Page Editors

It was billed as an "old time rally" for Jimmy Carter. Several thousand persons, Jackson County residents as well as SIU students, gathered in the campus Free Forum to hear what was supposed to be a 30-minute campaign speech. Advance men for the Democratic presidential candidate had alluded to a major statement that was to be included in the speech.

But nothing happened. The speech was closer to 10 minutes long and Carter said absolutely nothing new. His penchant for talking in generalities shined through. It was a lukewarm, uninspiring speech. Carter merely regurgitated the pap he's been giving voters for the past two years.

Accusations that Carter tailors his speeches for the audience he's addressing turned out to hold not a drop of water at SIU. He didn't alter anything Tuesday because there was nothing to be altered. It was a standard Carter speech.

As for the shortness of the speech, sources close to the Carter campaign implied that the candidate may have been briefer than planned because of a heckler who planted himself in a nearby tree. (It would appear that the closeness election day is starting to take its toll on Carter's nerves if he can allow a lone heckler, albeit obnoxious, to interfere with a campaign speech in front of thousands.)

If Carter left SIU with any more votes than he came here with, it should be considered a political miracle. To say that Carter may have even lost votes might not be too far off target.

The crowd was only sprinkled with zealous Carter supporters. The majority were either curiosity seekers or people hoping the candidate would say something to erase the doubts they have about him. Nothing of that sort appeared, however.

Noon-hour classes were either cut short or cancelled and a lot of people dropped whatever they were doing to come see and hear Carter.

But the rally was held at a site where a lot of people couldn't see the stage and many couldn't hear clearly what Carter was—or wasn't—saying. Those who expected to get an in-the-flesh look at potentially the next President of the United States were disappointed.

It made political sense for Carter to come to the Southern Illinois region, for this is considered a swing vote area. He has the Democratic votes sewed up in Chicago—Mayor Richard Daley will no doubt see to that.

Downstate, with the exception of Jackson County, has a tendency to vote Republican. This year the polls show this region leaning heavily toward the GOP, especially on the coattails of gubernatorial candidate James Thompson.

So it was well worth Carter's time and effort to drop in, as both John F. Kennedy and Hubert Humphrey did in their respective campaigns. Worth his time, that is, if he had something more to offer than a plea for help so he can "turn this country around." Around to what?

This is the year of political apathy and distrust of politicians; nothing was more evident than that at the Free Forum. The reception for the Democratic Presidential nominee was at best lukewarm. Of all the state's heavyweight Democrats on the stage, only Rep. Paul Simon was received really warmly, which he deserves. But when reference was made to Michael Howlett, the most conspicuous reaction of the day was heard—a loud chorus of jeers. One can therefore understand Carter's reluctance to get too close to the party's candidate for governor. Howlett could very well drag Carter to defeat in Illinois Nov. 2.

In fact, the entire stage, loaded as it was with Illinois Democrats of any and all import, was a display of false unity. Gov. Dan Walker, one of the most positive sounding speakers Tuesday, is not running for anything...at least not this year. He even referred to Mike Howlett (whose credibility he literally destroyed before facing Republican Thompson), as "Governor Mike Howlett."

It is said that politics makes strange bedfellows. But with Walker's presence at the Free Forum Tuesday, it was a political red-light district

Which is the way it's been throughout this campaign, coming from both Democrats and Republicans. In fairness to Carter, he may have been walking on eggshells this close to election time. The press, naturally, is just waiting to jump on any slip by Carter at this late stage. His colorless appearance here may have been a strategy in itself, hoping to maintain what minute lead he has now.

But that's a cop-out way to run for President, and the Carter rally here couldn't have been a bigger dud if Jerry Ford himself had planned it.

If Carter's appearance here Tuesday is a sample of his style and substance, it makes his winning of the Democratic nomination all the more incredible. No wonder people were asking "Jimmy who?"

Analysis shows Midwest crucial to presidential race

By Don McLeod
AP Political Writer

The industrial heartland, where President Ford is supposed to have his greatest strength and where the presidential election may very well be decided, is too close to call as the race enters the stretch drive.

"It's pretty much a toss-up all across this belt," said one top Ford strategist. "It's probably going to be decided in the last four days of the campaign."

An Associated Press survey of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, based on interviews with political and campaign leaders and the latest available polls, shows the race about even throughout the industrial Midwest.

These five states account for a total of 96 electoral votes of the 270 needed for election.

One of the things which makes predicting the Midwest difficult is the large concentration of East European ethnic voters and the still fluid situation created by Ford's statement in the second campaign debate that their ancestral homelands are not dominated by the Soviet Union.

Ford has admitted he made a mistake and reaffirmed his support of freedom for Eastern Europe, but the debate lingers on.

The Carter campaign claims spot surveys of Polish-American and Slavic-American communities in the Midwest indicate Ford's blunder may have boosted Carter support by as much as 20 per cent although the gain may prove temporary.

The Ford headquarters denies anything like a 20-point drop but concedes their own surveys showed erosion as much as 5 to 6 points. They say the President already has bounced back from what they now call a momentary setback.

Only Michigan, the President's home state, seems clearly in his favor at this point, and organized labor, marshalling solidly behind Democrat Jimmy Carter, promises to make it close even there.

Carter's best state in the area probably is Ohio, where one poll has shown him ahead by a dozen points, but a more recent poll by the Ford campaign gives the President a one-point lead.

Indiana, because of its Republican tradition in presidential elections, must be considered leaning toward Ford if anybody, but both sides see the race there as neck-and-neck.

Carter may have a slight lead in Wisconsin on the basis of objective appraisals, but this is tempered by the fact that the dairy state almost never votes Democratic in a presidential election.

In Illinois you can find polls going either way, but Carter probably has the edge. His best showing is the Chicago Sun-Times straw poll which gives him a 55 to 45 lead over Ford.

Because of his early lead, Carter's strategic choices have been broader, but his managers know they still must beat Ford somewhere in the Midwest if they are to oust him.

State-by-state here's how the Midwestern battleground looks:

ILLINOIS: Chicago has more citizens of Polish descent than any other city in the world except Warsaw, and also a concentration of Slavic-Americans. If the Eastern European thing is going to hurt Ford anywhere, it should be in the Chicago suburbs where Republicans have been making steady inroads into the ethnic vote.

The farm vote also may be affected by the loss of Butz, although it may be more an apathy problem than new Carter votes. But Carter has some following among the smaller farmers downstate.

Carter has the all-out support of Mayor Richard Daley's machine in Chicago. But Ford hopes for some coattail assistance from James Thompson, who is running well ahead in the race for governor.

A Chicago Tribune poll gave Ford an early lead for the 26 Illinois electoral votes, but the Sun-Times poll went the other way to Carter by a big spread. The consensus is that it is very close.

INDIANA: The Hoosier state, with its 13 electoral votes, is the home of Earl Butz, the agriculture secretary who resigned after being caught in some unprintable language slurring blacks. The farmers here adored Butz, especially the large grain producers who have prospered under his administration.

Butz's departure is likely to hurt Ford. Even if the farmers don't switch to Carter, they may just stay in the fields on election day. The black vote, already in Carter's corner, may be more highly motivated now.

MICHIGAN: This is Ford's homeland, which he represented as a congressman from Grand Rapids for 25 years, and the odds have to favor a native son and 21 electoral votes for Ford.

But Detroit has one of the largest concentrations of unionized workers in the country and an unemployment rate hovering around 10 per cent. The unions, splintered in 1972, are now solidly behind Carter, who also enjoys the support of a good state party organization.

Ford's biggest problem has been a lack of visibility in his homestate, although he formally opened his campaign there in September. But the Michigan organization is beginning to come around and put a dozen caravans on the road last week.

OHIO: No Republican has ever been elected president without carrying Ohio and its 25 electoral votes. Ordinarily this would be a safe Republican state, but Carter has built up strength in the industrialized Cleveland and Toledo areas and parlayed it with support in the Appalachian southeast.

The ethnic issue may pinch Ford here, too. Sen. Robert Taft Jr., himself in a tight re-election race, was so concerned about the Eastern European gaffe that he called on Ford to come to Cleveland and clarify it. There are 440,000 Eastern European ethnics in Ohio.

WISCONSIN: The Ford organization is sending a million pieces of mail into the dairy state in the campaign windup, and Carter is matching it. Both sides see this as a critical state.

Wisconsin, with 11 electoral votes, has a liberal tradition, but has gone against an incumbent Republican president only once in this century, Herbert Hoover in 1932.

But Republicans are worrying over a disaffection among the state's farmers which they find hard to explain. Without a good farm vote it would be difficult for Ford to overcome Carter's expected strength in Madison, seat of the state university, and in the industrial belt running from Kenosha to Green Bay and including the metropolitan Milwaukee area. The state also has a high ethnic quotient which may be sensitive to the East European issue.

The difference could lie in a Democratic strategy, aided by powerful labor allies, which is concentrating on turning out Democratic voters. Republicans are trying the same tactic, although with not quite the organization Carter has.

Halloween party scheduled

By Melissa Malkovich
Entertainment Editor

Halloween is being celebrated five days this year so "all souls" can join in the festivities.

The celebration begins Wednesday evening with a hypnotism demonstration and performance by Larry Garrett. Barry Richman, chairperson of the Student Center Programming Committee, said he "will display feats of hypnotism" from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. in Student Center Ballroom B. The show will be free.

A mime performance by Tim Settimi starts at 8 p.m. Thursday night. Settimi specializes in comic pantomime and will perform his free show in Ballrooms A and B.

Both Garrett and Settimi will be giving Free School Workshops on the arts of hypnotism and mime.

Garrett's class meets Wednesday at 2 p.m. in the Ohio Room, and Settimi's is scheduled for Thursday at 2 p.m. in the Mississippi Room. Attendance is limited, and interested persons should sign up at the Student Government Activities Office.

Three of the best "Twilight Zone" television shows of the early 60's will be shown at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. in the Student Center Auditorium. The shows are free. "People should come early because seats will fill up fast," Richman said.

The "Pre-Halloween Warm-Up Party" features music by Black Frost, a local soul jazz band, in Ballrooms A, B and C from 8 p.m. to midnight. The event is free and so are the contests going on that night. There will be a pumpkin decorating contest, a pumpkin pie eating contest, and a car defacing contest. Halloween night sees the "Halloween Costume Ball" with music by Coal Kitchen. "Everyone's favorite band and a spectacular costume contest are part of the events. Come in your craziest duds," Richman said. The costume ball goes on from 7:30 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. in Ballrooms C and D.

Also over the weekend, the SGAC films committee will be sponsoring the film "Death Race 2000" in the Student Center Auditorium. Admission is $1 for the show which will be screened Friday at 11 p.m. and Saturday at 7, 9 and 11 p.m. and Sunday at 7 and 9 p.m.

A free showing of Flash Gordon's serial "Rocket Ship" is sponsored by the SGAC video committee and will be shown Saturday night at 7:30 in the SGAC Video Lounge.

Security to be tight for Elvis

Elvis Presley will be provided with a lot of security when he arrives in Carbondale Wednesday in preparation for his concert at the SIU Arena.

Bob Harris, assistant director of the SIU Security Police said, "there will be no photographers or interviewers allowed and reporters will have to have a ticket to get into the Arena."

Harris will be Presley's personal escort in addition to Presley's own security. Harris will be with Presley throughout his stay in Carbondale.

Gary Drake, business manager for the Arena, said 83 ushers, seven under supervisors, five civil service ushers and special ticket personnel takers will be at the concert. The special personnel will help people who are having problems, and check on possible phony tickets.

The stage for the concert will be set eight feet lower on the floor because tickets were sold for behind the stage seats, said Drake. No one's viewing will be hindered Drake said. The equipment for the sound system will be suspended from the ceiling, nothing will be on stage Drake said. Ten policemen will be lined around the stage floor for Presley's protection said Harris. Drake said there will be no press interviews or appearances by Presley on campus before or after the concert.

Presley's manager Colonel Parker, who makes all the security arrangements for Presley, will be arriving in Carbondale early with further information on set-up, Harris said.

"The only problem expected is that of parking spaces," said Harris.

Radio show talks about dark horse

If you can't decide whom to vote for in the presidential elections, WDB's "Contact" program at 7 p.m. Wednesday may give you a few more insights.

WDB's Joe Paschen will talk to representatives of Eugene McCarthy's campaign as an independent candidate for president and members of the Carter-Mondale Democratic campaign for president.

Paschen will guide the questioning of the representatives on difficulties faced by third party candidates in going against the "big parties."

Heat treatment studied in research on cancer

By C. G. McDaniel
AP Science Writer
CHICAGO (AP)—The application of high heat to the entire bodies of 20 patients with advanced cancer is reported to have resulted in improvement in more than half of them.

Results of the study were presented at the recent clinical congress of the American College of Surgeons, by Dr. James M. Larkin, professor of surgery at the University of New Mexico school of medicine and the Veterans Administration Hospital, Albuquerque.

Larkin and his colleagues, Drs. W. Sterling Edwards and Daniel E. Smith, anesthetized the patients, then heated their bodies to about 108 degrees with tubes of heated gas to the lungs and a heated water blanket wrapped around them.

Larkin told a news conference that 14 of the patients had shrinkage or disappearance of the tumors. In addition, he said, the quality of remaining life for many was improved because they had less pain, regained their appetites and gained weight following the treatment.

"We are very excited with the results of treating cancer patients with heat therapy," he said.

Similar results were reported earlier this year in another 21 patients treated at the VA Hospital in Brooklyn, N.Y., by Dr. Harry Leveen, who used radio-frequency radiation to heat tumors. Heat also is being studied as a possible cancer treatment in Edinburgh, Scotland, and Newcastle, England.

Larkin said researchers do not yet know the mechanism by which heat works to help treat cancer. It is possible, he said, that the heat makes it easier for drugs to penetrate cancer cells or that it may stimulate the body's immune response to fight cancer.

However, he said, it is not yet known which cancers are most amenable to heat treatment. Lung cancer, melanoma and cancers of the stomach, breast and kidney were included in the study.

So far, he said, it cannot be claimed that the treatment cured any of the patients, although six are still alive 11 to 22 months following the treatment. All of the patients were in poor condition when treatment was begun.

Health Service conducting mental disorder survey

By Joan Peariman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer
The Health Service is conducting a survey of SIU students to determine the prevalence of psychiatric disorders and symptoms in the student population, according to Dr. Lee Spalt, Health Service psychiatrist.

Spalt said Friday that through the survey, the Health Service hopes to be able to compare certain characteristics of patients who have been treated for psychiatric disorders with characteristics of SIU students. These comparisons would be used in judging whether a patient's symptoms are significant and whether the Health Service is providing adequate care, he said. Depression is a common problem for which physicians treat patients, Spalt said. When a physician treats a student who says he suffers from depression he generally asks the student the characteristics of the depression, how long it lasts and if the depression is related to certain situations.

However, if the Health Service has current information on the prevalence and characteristics of depression among SIU students it will be easier for the physician to evaluate the significance of the patient's symptoms, he said.

Spalt said there is not enough current comparative data on psychiatric disorders and symptoms among college students for the Health Service to use as a basis for treating its patients. He said the Health Service's survey is the only method of evaluating the types of mental health services SIU students need.

Two thousand students were picked at random by a computer to take part in the survey, Spalt said. The Health Service is contacting these students by phone to explain the purpose of the survey and the nature of the questionnaire they will receive in the mail.

The names of the students participating in the survey will be kept "strictly confidential," Spalt said, and they will not be obligated to fill out the questionnaire. The students will be asked to sign a consent form, but the questionnaire will be sent to the Health Service in a separate envelope.

"It will be important to have all of the questionnaires returned to the Health Service to make the survey valid," Spalt said. "For example, if only 50 per cent of the questionnaires are returned it is very unlikely that the sample will be truly representative of the entire student population."

Playboy: Ford did not reject offer of interview

By William C. Wertz
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP)—President Ford never refused an in-depth interview with Playboy as he contended and the White House twice offered to set up shorter ones, the magazine said Tuesday.

The interviews were never held because of deadline and scheduling problems, but the White House was "cordial and cooperative," said Playboy, whose interview with Jimmy Carter caused a major campaign controversy.

At a news conference Oct. 20, Ford said, "I reiterate what I said once before. I turned down an invitation by Playboy magazine to have an interview such as Carter did. These are all factual statements."

But a Playboy spokesman said that, in fact, Ford was never offered an "interview such as Carter did," and that the White House cooperated in efforts to set up shorter interviews for articles the magazine was preparing.

Ford said Oct. 20 he refused to be interviewed by Playboy "with an emphatic no" because "I don't think the President of the United States ought to have an interview in a magazine featuring photographs of unclad women."

Hugh M. Hefner, editor and publisher of the magazine, accused Ford of "an improper and reprehensible attempt to damage the Democratic candidate through guilt by association, as thought granting an interview to Playboy were equivalent to posing naked in the center of the magazine."

"What is most improper in all this," Hefner said, "is the intended implication that Republicans in general, and the Ford administration in particular, is above such Playboy associations."

The magazine's assistant managing editor, Barry Golson, said Ford never was asked to do a "Playboy Interview," a special feature of the magazine which is based on a series of long, tape-recorded interviews.

However, Golson said, in September of 1974, following Playboy's publication of a satirical article entitled "I Am Jerry's Brain," the White House called and offered the magazine an opportunity to interview the president.

"The White House press office called Playboy and said that the President had read the article and invited the writer to spend a few days at the White House to see how the real Jerry Ford's brain works," Golson said.

He said the writer had other assignments and did not accept the invitation.

In July of 1975, Golson said, Playboy assigned a novelist to write a profile of the President and wrote Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, to request access to the White House staff and, if possible, a 20-minute meeting with the President.

"Nessen replied in writing that he would cooperate in the preparation of the article, which would include a presidential interview, but that Ford's travel plans would make it impossible that month," Golson said.

He said Nessen suggested that Playboy contact him again in the future.

"We clearly did not request the extensive and well-known Playboy interview, and as for the short session we did request, our own deadlines intervened," Golson said.

However, he said, "Our contacts with the White House were cordial and cooperative the very opposite of what President Ford has suggested occurred out of his personal conviction."

Hefner said he had received a telephone call Oct. 19 from President Ford's legal counsel, Benton Becker, seeking confirmation of what Becker said was a "solid rumor" that Carter was paid for his Playboy interview.

"Carter wasn't paid a penny, but this telephone call was quite obviously made with the hope that the Democratic candidate would be embarrassed by his association with Playboy," Hefner said.

Black voter interest declines steadily over past 10 years

By Dolores Barclay
Associated Press Writer

Black voter participation in national elections has been declining steadily over the past decade, even as the number of black elected officials on the state and local levels has soared.

Black registration in 1972 was 65.5 per cent of eligible voters, compared to a white registration of 73.4 per cent.

For this election, says John Britton of the Joint Center for Political Studies in Washington, only about 32 per cent of blacks are registered. This may be bad news for Democrats who are hoping for big black majorities in key industrial states.

Declining voter interest in national elections is characteristic of white as well as black voters, but the degree of non-participation by blacks is disturbing, Britton says.

"Ten per cent of the electorate is black," he noted. "If blacks as a group perceive their interest to revolve around one candidate, and if they vote, that 10 per cent could turn the election. But black voting has taken a nosedive."

"It's not apathy. It's cynicism. Why register? Why vote? It has to do with the fact that no matter how much blacks vote, government on all levels does not respond."

There was no upsurge of registration in the North this year, Britton said, despite a major registration called Operation Big Vote. "We were able to lure thousands of blacks in the North to register, but not nearly enough to close the gap."

Though a great many blacks have been elected to recent years at the local level, the inroads at the national level have been limited.

There are 17 black incumbents in the House of Representatives, all running for re-election, and one black senator, Edward Brooke, R-Mass., who isn't up for re-election this year.

In all, according to the Joint Center for Political Studies, there are 3,379 black elected officials as of June 30, more than three times as many in 1969, when there were 1,185. Nearly all are on the state and local level, and include 223 blacks in state legislatures, most of whom are also up for re-election in November.

There is a total of 522,000 elected officials in the U.S.

The majority of black office holders are in county and municipal posts, such as constable, probate judge, sheriff, coroner and school board member. Many face re-election this fall.

Does the presence of such black candidates stimulate a black turnout? "If blacks believe it will make a difference, then you'll see a big turnout," says Rep. Yvonne Burke, D-Calif., chairwoman of the Congressional Black Caucus. "In North Carolina last September, we had a black run for lieutenant governor. We didn't get too many blacks turning out to vote because they didn't think it would make a difference. He lost."

Mrs. Burke added that the recent furor over a racial slur made by former Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz might bring a lot more blacks to the voting booths.

While registration in the North has been languid, it's increased substantially in the South. Close to four million blacks are registered in the 11 Southern states, says John Lewis, executive director of the Voter Education Project.

Census figures show that the South, with 53 per cent of America's black population, has 55 per cent of all black elected officials.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)—Forty-five years after it began, "Scottsboro Boy" Clarence Norris won a full pardon from the State of Alabama on Monday and the right to live at last in full freedom.

He had spent five years on death row, years more behind bars and decades living as a fugitive, all for a crime he always insisted he did not commit.

"It's great to be free. There's nothing like being free," Norris said in New York, where he now lives. First the Alabama Pardon-Parole Board and then Gov. George C. Wallace signed a pardon for the 64-year-old laborer who, with eight other young black men, was accused of raping two white women aboard a freight train in Alabama in 1931.

The case became one of the most controversial in the South. Because the alleged rape occurred near Scottsboro in north Alabama and the trial was held there, the defendants became known throughout the world as the "Scottsboro Boys."

Norris, the last of the nine defendants known to be still alive, is working now as a laborer for the City of New York. He fled from Alabama after being paroled in 1946, and the state continued to list him as a parole violator.

The Pardon-Parole Board not only pardoned Norris, but in effect also recognized his innocence. By law, the board could pardon him only if it felt there was proof of his innocence.

Now that he is free to do so, Norris said he would go back to Alabama. "I'll go to any state because I'm free," he said. "I was born and raised in the South. It's one of the most beautiful places in the world."

At a news conference at the New York headquarters of the NAACP, which represented him in pursuing the pardon, Norris said there was a lesson for black people in his pardon.

"Don't ever give up hope," he explained. "Always fight for your rights. That's what I believe in. Even if it kills you, stand up for your rights."

Norris said he knew something was going to happen Monday and took the day off from work. He said he got the news of his pardon in a Harlem bar when he telephoned the NAACP.

When Norris first inquired about a pardon last summer, he encountered stern resistance from the Pardon-Parole Board. The chairman of the board, Norman Ussery, said Norris was still a fugitive and would have to return to prison in Alabama before the request could be considered.

Norris said repeatedly he did not want to go back to Alabama.

Ussery ultimately changed his mind, and in a statement Monday he explained why.

At first, he said, "we did not have any information as to where he Norris was living, where he worked, or what his behavior had been since he left Alabama."

But the official application gave the board "the necessary information to investigate this case," the chairman said, and "after verifying this information, I no longer felt that he was a fugitive from justice."

Norris said in a recent interview that after fleeing Alabama he lived in Cleveland until 1953, when he went to New York. He is married now, and has two daughters, 20 and 16 years old.

Like other business efforts, campaign work is seasonal

By Elizabeth Boscia
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Like pumpkins and Christmas trees, election time is a seasonal business, but with what little time they have, Democratic and Republican headquarters in Carbondale seek maximum production.

Democratic headquarters for state and local candidates is located on South Illinois Avenue directly opposite the train station. Carter-Mondale volunteers retain an office around the corner on Main Street.

Joe Dunn, Democratic volunteer coordinator for Jackson, Williamson, Franklin and Saline counties, said the locations of both headquarters were chosen for their proximity to the mainstream of Carbondale traffic.

Republican volunteers are less concerned with their locale. Although their headquarters is on Main Street at the West Side Shopping Center, their storefront does not catch the passerby's view.

But despite geographic and political differences, the purpose of both headquarters is the same—to encourage voter participation for the party they represent.

Marty Larsen, Republican volunteer and SIU student, said his organization's turnout for volunteer work has been good during this election year.

Republican headquarters opened on Sept. 7 and will remain operational until election day, Nov. 2. It is directing its work for local and state candidates and the Ford-Dole ticket.

Dunn said the Democratic headquarters is coordinating its efforts for local and state candidates, with the exception of U.S. Rep. Paul Simon, who has his headquarters stationed in his Carbondale office.

Dunn emphasized, however, that volunteers at the state Democratic headquarters are with the Simon workers "100 per cent."

Stuffing envelopes with campaign material, distributing literature, knocking on doors and making phone calls are chores characteristic of both headquarters.

Both sides agree that voter apathy does not seem as widespread as had been indicated in elections during the past few years.

Dunn said his Democratic volunteers have found that people are still undecided about certain issues, so it is their hope that circulating literature will help enable voters to make more intelligent choices.

Another shared condition of both Republican and Democratic headquarters is the lack of, and large requests for, campaign buttons. Local and state candidate buttons are more abundant, but presidential buttons have become collectors' items.

Larsen said campaign buttons were in immediate demand as soon as the Republican headquarters opened in September. He attributed the small amounts of available buttons to more emphasis being placed on media campaigning and said the same is true of bumper stickers.

Both Democratic and Republican volunteers view the SIU campus as an important campaigning area. Students are eligible to vote here after 30 days residency and providing they register.

Dunn said SIU represents four electoral precincts so his volunteers will make a concerted effort to encourage the student vote.

Students comprise a large part of the volunteer campaign forces for both the SIU Democrats and the SIU Republican Club are working with the respective party headquarters.

As short-lived as a campaign headquarters existence is, both groups of volunteers feel a strong sense of friendship and accomplishment from campaigning.

Election day is the grand finale, but win or lose, both headquarters view the day as one to reward their long weeks of hard work.

Student trustee says office needs 'better definition'

By Bonnie Gamble
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer
Student representatives are the only elected members of the SIU Board of Trustees but they are not allowed to vote.

Rob Seely, a graduate student in public visual communications, represents students on the Carbondale campus to the Board of Trustees. A student trustee is also elected for the Edwardsville campus.

Elected in last spring's general elections, Seely feels his office needs to be better defined. He says that is what he is attempting to do.

Through Seely's efforts an office has been established for the student trustee in the Student Life offices. Before his term ends in May, Seely wants to "solidify the staff and get an advisory board going."

Why does Seely bother with a job that is not only non-paid but also non-defined? "I've always been fascinated with the concept of the office," he said. "I knew there were things I could do with it."

Seely sees his role as an advisory one. He wants to create an executive board with representatives from student government and the Graduate Student Council to "give me a little guidance and start two way communications between myself and the student."

Seely is the third student trustee since it became state law that university boards of trustees must have student representatives. Matthew Rich was the first student trustee and Forest "Rusty" Lightle preceded Seely.

"I believe that there are some serious problems with the student trustee having a vote. It might be a conflict of interest," Seely said.

Trustees are not supposed to be involved in internal university matters Seely said. However, Seely alluded to but would not discuss new developments which might make him change his mind and support a student vote.

Two problems Seely encountered after he was elected were the lack of orientation for the job and not having enough time to get used to the office.

"It takes at least a year for anyone to get used to this office," Seely said.

Even though Seely will be familiar with the office at the end of his term, he says he will not run for the position again. He will be leaving SIU but even if he were staying, he wouldn't run again. "I think it's the type of office that needs to let as many people in it as possible," Seely said.

He said the last two student trustees were criticized for doing nothing while in office. Seely said this was unfair. There is much to do, he said, but most of it is not easily visible.

Thompson politicks in Peoria

EAST PEORIA (AP) — James M. Thompson, the Republican candidate for governor, mixed American-style politics and an Old World breakfast Tuesday, munching on Lebanese bread and sipping Lebanese liqueur at a neighborhood tavern after campaigning at a plant gate here.

"You guys are going to have to wait because I'm waiting on the next governor," owner Chuck

Anthony told patrons as he served Thompson, who dropped in during a hectic day of campaigning that included speeches in Peoria and a round of campaigning with President Ford.

In Peoria, Thompson hammered his Democratic opponent, Michael Howlett, for being dominated by Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley and for avoiding issues in the campaign.

Presidential candidate Jamie-O has refrigerator for platform

By Kenin-Lee Hicks
Student Writer

Presidential candidate Jamie-O the Clown says his platform is a used refrigerator and that he is running with the Seventh Party — "one for every night of the week."

James O. Stephan, an SIU graduate student who works throughout Southern Illinois as a professional clown, believes he is the first candidate campaigning for the 1988 general election when "I'll be 37 and old enough to be elected."

As for his stand on the issues, Jamie-O doesn't have any. "I'm too involved with my campaign to make any decisions," Jamie-O said.

Candidate Jamie-O became interested in becoming a clown when he was about eight years old.

He considered being a magician until he met Ronald McDonald who told him that he would make a good clown.

Actually, Jamie-O said, he had been a clown "since I was born." Today, as a professional clown, he does magic and balloon sculpturing and performs at children's birthday parties.

Jamie-O said that his idea to run for president derived from the Watergate era, however the actual campaign which began in August was rather accidental.

"A friend of mine ran off about 30 Jamie-O for President bumper stickers." People wanted the bumper stickers, explained Jamie-O.

As a candidate for the presidency,

Jamie-O said, "I feel that I'm as good as any of the other choices." Dusting his two-foot fluorescent pink shoes, Jamie-O said, "This is not a personal thing against anyone. I'm poking fun at the system, not at the candidates."

Jamie-O said that he is attempting to raise a consciousness of the system. "I'm not tearing it down or changing it."

As Jamie-O pushed his radiant pink hair from his painted white clown face, he explained that he wants Americans to be able to laugh at themselves.

"I couldn't make this campaign in any other country but America," Jamie-O said. "If anything, I'm trying to improve political awareness."

Crowd overflow prompts query on site

By Anne Brooks
Student Writer

In an effort to see Jimmy Carter, people crowded shoulder-shoulder along the sloped ground, lined the overpass and stood atop the parking garage. The overflow crowd stood atop cars on the garage's upper level, while others watched from the treetsops.

Across the street, McAndrew Stadium stood empty, as did the Arena.

The question arises, why was the Free Forum Area chosen as the site for Tuesday's Jimmy Carter rally?

Bob Harris, assistant director of campus security, said Carter's advance man selected the area because Carter wanted an old-fashioned outdoor rally.

Other reasons were that the Carter advance people wanted the beauty of the trees and a place where classes would not be disturbed. The area south of Anthony Hall was designated a forum area because the acoustics there prevent noise from being carried over to the classroom buildings.

The Free Forum Area was chosen by Dan Lee, a Carter advance man who came to SIU last week to decide on a site for the rally. Harris said Lee did not even look at the open area behind Woody Hall because "he looked at the Free Forum Area and liked it." Harris also said McAndrew Stadium was not used because of anticipated damage to the turf, primarily by smokers.

The Arena was not used because, as Allan Krause, a coordinator at the Carter-Mondale headquarters said, Carter has been campaigning outdoors all over the country and saw no reason to change now.

The rally was patrolled by University, city, county and state police. Harris said early Tuesday afternoon he had received about six complaints of damage to cars on the upper level of the parking garage where people were standing on them.

He said there were few hecklers and little trouble with crowd control except when Carter was trying to leave the Free Forum Area. Two fences, set up to form a corridor for Carter to get through, had to be held back by police and were broken in several places by the crowd pushing toward Carter.

Ford, Percy campaign to win back GOP seats

By Mike Robinson
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP)—With Sen. Charles H. Percy leading the way, President Ford made a pair of campaign stops Tuesday in congressional districts where Republicans are trying to win back House seats from Democrats.

But Ford hit hard on the issue of jobs, saying little about the congressional hopefuls.

"Too many people are out of work," Ford said at Ford City shopping center on the South Side. "We're not satisfied with the progress we've made."

Ford said, though, that "this country has made a tremendous comeback from where we were 18 months ago."

The shopping center is in the mostly suburban 3rd District, where Republican Ronald Buikema, South Holland village attorney, is trying to unseat Democratic Rep. Martin Russo, who won the traditionally Republican seat two years ago.

The crowd, heavily loaded with children and teenager girls, squealed at Ford several times as if he were a rock'n' roll idol. Local Republicans, including Buikema, also were on hand.

From there, Ford's motorcade rolled up the rain-splattered Tri-State Tollway to the Northbrook headquarters of Allstate Insurance Co. The office is in the 10th District, where former Rep. Sam Young is trying to oust Abner J. Mikva, the Democratic incumbent.

Young, flanked by GOP Reps. Philip M. Crane and Robert McClell, looked on as Ford told employees gathered in the Allstate lunchroom that "the time must come when every young American who wants to work will have a job in America."

At each stop Ford mentioned the U.S. sweep of the Nobel Prizes this year. Two of the winners, Saul Bellow for literature and Milton Friedman for economics, are on the faculty of the University of Chicago. Ford brought up the Nobels after noting the Jimmy Carter "says America isn't respected anymore." After ticking off the various prizes won by U.S. citizens, he said, "That doesn't sound like a second-rate operation to me."

Ford was met at O'Hare International Airport by former Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie, his Illinois campaign chairman. At one stop, Percy said, "Dick Ogilvie and I have known him for a quarter of a century and we believe him to be a good man and a great president."

At Ford City, former baseball catcher Joe Gargiolo, now a television announcer, introduced Ford.

"I don't know anything about these things," Gargiolo said. "I don't know anything about nuclear power. I know one thing, I'm a Jerry Ford man."

Supporters at airport sound convinced

By John O'Brien
News Editor

Any voter support problems Jimmy Carter may have in Southern Illinois were not evident Tuesday morning when he brought his campaign to the Williamson County Airport.

A crowd of about 600 persons lined the ropes near the runway when Carter's plane—the Peanut One and Two—set down about 11:38, 38 minutes late.

If Carter did not stir mass hysteria, the welcome was considerably warmer than the brisk 53 degree air outside.

The arrivals by plane of Democrats Michael Howlett, gubernatorial candidate, Gov. Daniel Walker, and Sen. Adlai Stevenson drew polite though not rousing applause. The crowd's greatest effort came when Carter stepped out of Peanut One.

After greeting his fellow Democratic politicians, who had kept the crowd warmed up with handshakes before Carter arrived, the presidential hopeful was engulfed by reporters, most of whom had flooded from Peanut Two about five minutes before Carter arrived in the first Peanut.

Carter then briefly addressed the crowd, promising that he would "help" them on Jan. 20, inauguration day, in exchange for their help at the polls on Nov. 2. He encouraged the prospective voters to make a "sacrificial effort" to get to the polls at a time when the country's "strength is at stake."

Those among the voters who had hoped to shake Carter's hand were disappointed, however, as he waved goodbye to the crowd and broke into a run to the caravan which was to take him to Carbondale for his noon appearance on campus.

This seemed not to detract from

LOCATES SISTER
CANTON, Ohio (AP) — With the help of two Ohio mayors, Aristidis Stamatis of Athens, Greece, finally got in touch with his sister, Angelica Berbeles.

Stamatis, who had not seen Mrs. Berbeles since she left Greece 57 years ago, wrote a letter addressed to the "Honorable Mayor of Ohio," seeking information on his sister's whereabouts.

The letter landed in the office of Cincinnati Mayor Bobbie Sterne. He noted that Canton was mentioned in the address and forwarded the letter to Canton Mayor Stanley Crnich.

Crnich passed the letter on to his receptionist Helen Christ, who knew Mrs. Berbeles from St. Haralambos Greek Orthodox Church.

Mrs. Berbeles said she wrote back to her brother immediately.

Carter's support. A few youngsters vocalized their dejection, but most of the crowd headed for the exit wearing a smile similar to the one Carter displayed throughout his appearance. As one woman put it, "No I'm not disappointed, he's already late."

Lloyd Dean of Carbondale said he supports Carter, because Carter is a Democrat. Dean said he himself is a Democrat because "I don't know how you could be anything else."

Dean said he remembers when Carbondale was "two-to-one Republican." But its Democratic now, he said, "because now people have learned to read, and they have newscasts to tell them how to vote."

Most of those interviewed before Carter's arrival indicated strong support for him. Many said they view the Carter campaign as a crusade for the worker, the poor and the common man. Laverne Baggett of Carbondale was the most tentative of those interviewed. She said she had not made up her mind definitely but said "I've given it a lot of serious thought and I think we need a change—a little new machinery."

If Carter support in Southern Illinois is not showing in the polls, Dean said, it is because the pollsters don't call the right people.

"The workers are the backbone of the Democratic party, but when they take the polls they don't call the workers, because they're at work."

The debates, Dean said, further convinced him that "Ford isn't for the worker."

Carter told what he's for, then Ford told what he's for, and it seems to me that he (Ford) isn't for anything. At least Carter—knows what he wants to do."

Omer Yetes of Goreville, who said he has "been in the mines for 53 years," described himself as a laborer and a union man. Carter, he said, "talks to parts of the common man, Ford talks to parts of the uncommon man. Carter is superior in everything he says."

"Any labor man who votes for Ford, Yetes said, "is like a rooster who votes for Colonel Sanders—puttin' his head out to be chopped off."

Arma Lea Merriman, another Carter supporter, said she was glad to see Carter come to Southern Illinois because "it shows he's concerned about us."

She said the charge that Carter is two-sided is not true. "Ford's the one who's two-sided," Merriman said. "He didn't do anything till the convention. Now it seems like he'd give you his socks if you asked him for them. I'd tell him so if he was here, too," she said.

Carter's "Playboy" interview, she said, "showed he's just an ordinary person. That sort of thing happens to every man if they'd just be honest about it."

If Ford is elected, she said, "things will be the same way they have been in the past—no rise in anything. We're in a downfall. Carter will try, he's for the working person. Any working person who votes for Ford won't get anything, and that's just what they deserve."

Judy Whitson, Democratic

precinct committeewoman from Energy, was there with her three children who indicated their preference for Carter at their mothers insistence. Whitson said Energy will vote for Carter because "it's a poor town and they'll vote for a Democrat."

"Carter's for the poor person—Ford's not helping us. We need to get them off the relief and unemployment lines and back to work."

Jimmy Carter greeted about 600 persons from his plane "Peanut One" at the Williamson County Airport Tuesday at 11:38 a.m. After a brief speech to the crowd, Carter made his first appearance at SIU, where he delivered a campaign speech in the Free Forum Area. Carter's plane was nearly 40 minutes behind schedule. (Staff photo by Peter Zimmerman)

College of Human Resources:

Dean says reorganization would minimize waste

Editor's note: This is the third in a series of articles examining the 11 colleges and schools of the University. The articles take a look at where the colleges are today and at the problems they are facing.

By Steve Bauman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

In an attempt to strengthen the College of Human Resources, Dean Stanley Smith has submitted to the Board of Trustees a proposal for reorganization of the College.

The reorganization plan would minimize waste and duplication of courses that now exists within the College, Smith said. He added that the realignment would increase the efficiency of the more than 95 faculty members within the College.

Under the plan, the 11 departments making up the college would be combined into five divisions. Each division would be headed by a director and the departments within the division would be headed by a coordinator.

The departments would be divided into divisions according to their compatibility with other departments in the division, said Smith, who has been dean of the College since its formation in 1973.

Other factors in the grouping of departments include the number of undergraduate and graduate majors in each department, the number of full-time employees in the departments and the moneys the departments generate compared to their expenditures.

Under the plan, Rehabilitation Institute and the Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency and Corrections would each become divisions.

The departments of clothing and textiles, design and interior design would make up the Division of Comprehensive Planning and Design.

The child and family, the family economics and management and the food and nutrition departments would form the Human Development Division.

A fifth division would include the departments of social welfare, community development and ethnic studies. Ethnic studies, is presently Black American studies, but courses will be expanded to include other ethnic groups, thus the name change, Smith said.

If the plan is approved, Smith said, it will strengthen the existing graduate and undergraduate programs and possibly lead to the development of other graduate programs.

Drawing from the faculty and resources of the departments of community development and ethnic studies, the social welfare department may be able to develop a master of social welfare (MSW) degree, Smith said.

Paul Denise, chairperson of the community development department, said the realignment would strengthen the proposed MSW program without taking anything away from the community development graduate program.

Smith had instructed the department heads of the proposed Comprehensive Planning and Design and Human Development divisions to develop proposals for divisional graduate programs.

Smith pointed out that the Comprehensive Planning and Design division graduate program will be easier to establish because the design department previously had a graduate program.

Davis Pratt, acting chairperson of the Design Department, predicted the graduate program would be reactivated by the end of the school year.

Pratt said the Design Department stopped offering the graduate courses two years ago, because the program was to undergo "reorganization."

A committee set up by the department chairpersons of the proposed Human Development Division is reviewing the Home Economics graduate program and will suggest modifications so that the program can be adapted by the division.

Irene Payne, professor of food and nutrition and a member of the committee, said the new divisional graduate program will offer specializations in each of the existing departments.

Payne added the new program would "probably increase the number of graduate students in the program." She estimated 30 students are presently enrolled in the Home Economics graduate program.

The Rehabilitation Institute offers master's degrees in three specializations. Specializations within the department are rehabilitation and administration, rehabilitation counseling and behavior modification.

Guy Renzaglia, director of the Rehabilitation Institute, said the institute which enrolls nearly 200 of the more than 300 graduate students within the college has submitted a doctorate proposal to the Graduate School. He hopes it will be approved by Fall Semester, 1977.

Renzaglia said his department has been operating under a system similar to the proposed divisional realignment for a number of years.

He suggested the success of the institute is one of the reasons the College is adapting a similar organizational set up.

Renzaglia cited the national recognition, high placement of graduates (95 per cent of the graduates find suitable jobs within six months after graduation) and the large amount of outside money the institute attracts as barometers of its success.

Smith pointed out the institute was not combined with other departments in the reorganization because of the specialization already offered by the department and the number of faculty members (22/75).

Similar reasons were given by Smith for allowing the Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency and Corrections to remain intact and form its own division.

Smith said both the center and the institute have multi-disciplinary faculties.

E.H. Johnson, acting director of the Center from June 15 until Oct. 1, said plans are underway within the Center for the addition of new undergraduate courses and changes in the graduate program.

Lawrence A. Bennett, became the new director of the Center effective Oct. 1. Bennett formerly was chief of the research division of the California Department of Corrections.

If realignment becomes a reality, Smith said, the College "will be able to more efficiently utilize the positions within the College and at the same time be conducive to quality education.

"One of the rationale for the reorganization is that the College will be able to operate within its present budget," the dean said. The College operates under a budget of approximately $2.5 million.

Another advantage cited by Smith was the increased opportunity for expanded laboratory and field work for the more than 1,700 students enrolled in the College.

Professors choose AFT as bargaining union

By Barry Hanson
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A unit of the American Federation of Teachers has been selected as the first collective bargaining unit to represent faculty members at Illinois four-year universities, it was announced Monday.

In an election among more than 1,700 faculty members at the five universities under the Board of Governors, the AFT received 1,068 votes, according to Cyrus Alexander, head of the state Office of Collective Bargaining and administrator of the election.

Another union, the American Association of University Professors received 464 votes, and 93 faculty members cast ballots indicating they preferred neither.

The schools under the Board of Governors are Chicago State University, Eastern Illinois University at Charleston, Governor's State University at Park Forest South, Northeastern Illinois University at Chicago and Western Illinois University at Macomb.

The election represented the first time that faculty members at state universities have picked a union to represent them.

Professor: 'botched hangings' led to the use of electric chair

By Timothy Harper
Associated Press Writer

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Theodore Bernstein, an electrical engineering professor, doubles as an after-dinner speaker. His topic: the electric chair, its origin, history and use.

"There were a number of botched hangings in New York in the 1800's, and people began to look for something better," the University of Wisconsin professor relates.

"They thought of shooting, the garrote, the guillotine and other things but they were all too messy. They thought of lethal injections but no doctors would do it."

Then, with the rise in the popularity of electricity, people began being accidentally electrocuted and it seemed quick and easy.

"There was a big political thing over how legal electrocutions should be done between Thomas Edison and George Westinghouse," says Bernstein. "Edison was against capital punishment but said if it was done it should be done with Westinghouse's alternating current because it was more dangerous."

Westinghouse was against electrocutions with either system, his AC or Edison's DC direct current, Bernstein says.

"There was no word for electrocution at the time, and Edison wanted it to be called Westinghousing," he reports.

Bernstein gives his lectures several times a year to engineering groups and university seminars. His main interest is electrical and lighting safety, but he began studying the electric chair because people in his audiences continually asked about it.

He noted, however, that some people walk out of the lecture because of the subject.

Indeed, Bernstein himself is beginning to find the subject discouraging now that a Supreme Court ruling has reopened the way for use of the electric chair.

"I am very much opposed to capital punishment for personal reasons," he says. "If they start executions again, I will probably stop my talks. It wouldn't be interesting any more. It used to be of historical significance, but now it's getting too close to home."

Bernstein credits a Buffalo dentist, A.P. "Old Spark" Southwick, with spreading the word of the electric chair and calls him "the father of the legal electrocution."

The first legal electric execution was in 1890 when a New York fruit peddler was electrocuted for killing his girl friend while both were drunk, Bernstein says.

In all, Bernstein says, 4,310 persons, including 21 women, have been put to death in the electric chair.

He says many people are fascinated by the electric chair, but he still has no answer for those who ask whether it really hurts or not. "There's no way to know," he says.

Expert says new bank system in need of privacy safeguards

WASHINGTON (AP) — Privacy safeguards should be strengthened before banks begin widespread use of computerized payment systems replacing cash and checks, witnesses told a new government commission today.

Alan F. Weston of Columbia University said the electronic systems will require laws forbidding use of financial records except for purposes authorized by the subject. Use of the computerized systems, now in effect in some areas, is expected to become widespread within a few years.

Weston, an expert on privacy, told the opening hearing of the National Commission on Electronic Funds Transfers that the systems could allow "unprecedented feats of surveillance" over citizens.

The commission was established to make recommendations on new laws that may be needed to adjust to electronic financial systems. Experts predict that the automated networks will largely replace the present paper-based system of cash and checks in coming years.

Ford's first East European remark was right, Polish SIU student says

By Ken Offerman
Student Writer

President Ford was correct in his statement that there is no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe, according to Elzbieta Izbicka, a graduate student from Poland and a Communist Party member in that country.

During the second debate with Jimmy Carter, Gerald Ford declared "there is no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe, and there never will be under a Ford Administration."

In the weeks since, Ford has been hard pressed in attempting to defend, clarify and redefine his controversial remarks.

Izbicka, 25, a doctoral candidate in chemistry who has lived in the United States for the past year said the Soviet Union dominates Poland and Eastern Europe today no more than the United States dominates
West Germany and Western Europe. The ties are more economic and cultural in nature, she said.

"I will agree with Ford's statement," said Izbicka, who believes the President was forced to redefine his remarks for fear of losing popularity in an election year.
Izbicka said the other seven students from Poland at SIU would be of the same general opinion as herself. She believes that most Americans and citizens of Eastern European extraction have many misconceptions of what is going on in that part of the world today.

"Eastern European immigrants to America have lost track of reality," she said. The era of Soviet domination characterized 30 years ago under Stalin's rule which she referred to as "iron hand and disasterous," is no longer relevant.
"The Stalinist period is a thing of the past," she added.

What happened in Hungary in 1956 and Czechoslovakia in 1968 could never happen in Poland today, according to Izbicka. The civil disturbances in Poland several years ago which led to a change in government were motivated by economic rather than political problems, she said.

"In 1968, Dubcek was too idealistic and not very practical," she said, referring to the Czech leader who was ousted after Russian tanks were used to restore a more compatible government in Prague.

Izbicka has traveled throughout
Eastern Europe and Russia as well as Western Europe and the United States.

She will return to Poland to teach chemistry at the Technical University of Wroclaw. She had studied music before entering college and has a B.S. in biology and bio-chemistry with a M.S. in biochemistry.

She said the United States is different from European countries
because of the emphasis Americans put on materialism at the expense of interpersonal relationships. "I will never accept the American way of life. Its a continuous run for money which only dehumanizes people,"
she said.

The Eastern European countries have fewer consumer goods and may be a little backward by Western standards, but they do not have the inflation and unemployment of the West, said Izbicka.

She added that her American experience has been valuable,
because of the importance of having a free exchange of people and ideas between nations. She expressed the hope that her generation will be able to reduce the barriers and to promote better understanding in the world.

This sign which rose out of the crowd at the Carter rally Tuesday in the Free Forum Area, was probably an uncomfortable reminder to the candidate of that now famous interview with "Playboy" magazine.

Kremlin leaders retain their Politburo positions

MOSCOW (AP)—The likelihood of a Kremlin shakeup faded Tuesday as a two-day meeting of the Communist party's Central Committee ended with the nation's aging leaders all retaining their powerful Politburo posts.

Before the meeting, rumors had circulated that Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, 72, might be nearing the end of his career. Kosygin has been reported to be ill and dropped from public view for three months until reappearing earlier this month.

A Moscow radio communique at the end of the year's second committee session announced no changes in the Politburo, whose members, averaging close to 66 years in age, control party and state policy.

Only second-level personnel changes were announced: the election of a new Central Committee secretary, raising the number to 11, and the elevation of three candidate members to full membership in the 280-member Central Committee.

The committee meeting is to be followed on Wednesday by the 1976 session of the Soviet parliament, known as the Supreme Soviet, which technically could bring changes in Soviet government positions.

But no major changes in the leadership were expected to come following the lack of a party announcement on Tuesday. And no visible steps were expected to be taken toward solving succession problems as Soviet leaders grow older.

"Nothing has changed," one Western diplomat commented at the conclusion of Tuesday's closed session. "As for succession, they're no closer than they were before."

Communist party general secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev, who will be 70 in December, made a 10,000-word speech to the Central Committee on Monday and appears to be in robust political health.

The new Central Committee secretary announced in the communique is Yakov P. Ryabov, 48, first secretary of the Communist party organization in the Sverdlovsk district.

New ordinance bars dealers from Liquor Advisory Board

By Steve Hahn
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer
With a divided vote, the City Council passed an ordinance barring liquor dealers from the Liquor Advisory Board.

Council members Joe Dakin and Archie Jones voted with Mayor Neal Eckert to abolish the position while Councilwoman Helen Westberg and Councilman Hans Fischer voted to retain it.

The council action came Monday after the Liquor Advisory Board recommended retention of the liquor dealer membership on the basis of a one-year term. The term had been for three years.

Although the council did not specify that the ordinance was intended to remove W. Stephen Hoffmann, the current liquor dealer on the board, it had that effect.

The ordinance states that it "shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage, approval, recording and publication in accordance with law." Ordinances are usually published several days after the mayor signs them following council approval.

At a previous council meeting, Dakin said keeping a liquor dealer on the board gives that member access to information other members of the liquor business do not have.

Fischer responded Monday saying the problem could be solved by not allowing the ex officio members (liquor dealers) to have access to confidential information.

Hoffmann said after the council meeting that he would not resign because it is "not necessary." He said instead, he would not attend any future board meeting as a board member.

The ordinance states, "The City Council of the City of Carbondale finds and determines that the best interests of the citizens of the City of Carbondale would be served if the Liquor Advisory Board of the City of Carbondale contained no ex officio members, and no members who are involved in the liquor business." Hoffmann is co-owner of Eastgate Liquor Mart. Members of the local liquor industry had been given a seat on the board to provide the other members with expert advice. Ex officio members have no voting rights.

City Atty. John Wornick said the ordinance was drafted at the request of the Carbondale Liquor Commission. The commission made the request in August after suspending the liquor licenses of Stephen, Thomas and Philip Hoffmann and Robert and Thomas Palmier for misfiling their liquor license applications, Wornick said.

Hoffmann was appointed to the board by Eckert in 1969. His current term was to expire on May 5, 1978.

In other action, the council terminated a contract with SIU which allowed the University to provide the city with ambulance service.

The termination will take effect Oct. 1. Jackson County will take over the service Nov. 1.

Eckert said the county's service will be cheaper than SIU's.

Teamster pension fund trustees resigning amid investigation

By Cheryl Debes
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP)—The Teamsters Union's largest pension fund announced mass resignations of trustees Tuesday amid continuing federal inquiries into alleged corruption and ties to organized crime.

A fund spokesman said 11 of the 15 trustees of the $1.4 billion Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund, would leave their posts. Another trustee stepped down earlier.

The spokesman attributed the resignations to the fund's "plan to streamline the board to meet rapidly changing economic forces and to respond to them more efficiently." A new board, whose members will be announced Friday, will be trimmed to 10 members, he said.

But sources in Washington said the trustees were informed in writing by the Labor Department's chief legal officer, William J. Kilberg, that any decisions to remain on the board could be a factor in determining individual liability in the event of civil action.

At the same time, the sources said, no deals were made and the resignations would not relieve trustees of liability for past actions. Federal pension law stipulates that trustees can be held personally responsible for fund losses incurred as a result of wrongdoing.

While fund officials refused further comment on reasons for the resignations, a government spokesman in Washington said they were the result of an ongoing federal probe into charges of illegal payoffs, mismanagement and alleged connections with organized crime.

Continued control of the fund by certain trustees was "a matter of particular importance because apparently a number of their major loans had reached a point calling for critical decisions," the government spokesman said. "And we felt the board evidenced little or no faith that it could make those decisions prudently."

In St. Louis, Herman Leuking Jr., one of eight trustees appointed by the trucking industry, said the new board will consist of five members appointed by the union and five named by management.

Attorney: police spying papers were destroyed

CHICAGO (AP)—Intelligence records on 1,300 organizations and 105,000 individuals were destroyed by the Chicago Police Department after it learned a suit was planned charging illegal police spying, a lawyer said Tuesday.

Richard Gutman, counsel for an Alliance to End Repression, a community coalition, said police also destroyed all records revealing the identities of at least 220 informers.

The Alliance and other organizations filed suit in November, 1974. Gutman said the police department destroyed the records between November 1973 and March 1974. He said records on at least 40 informers were destroyed the month the lawsuit was filed.

Gutman said one police department report indicated the Alliance planned to file suit and it noted, "It seems this time they are finally ready to proceed with the lawsuit. . . It would only seem reasonable that any steps that can be taken to prepare for the possible problems ahead should be taken as soon as possible. It may be too late if postponed."

SIU gymnastics teams to meet in the 'Battle of the Sexes'

By Dave Heun
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

The SIU women's gymnastics team annually marks the opening of the it's season with the Kennedy Memorial Meet, usually an intrasquad affair.

In this season's meet, however, the women take on a tough foe, the SIU men's gymnastics team. The meet, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Friday in the SIU Areen, will open the season for both teams.

Billed as "The Battle of the Sexes," the meet will pit the Saluki men, coached by Bill Meade, and the Saluki women, coached by Herb Vogel.

The Kennedy Memorial Meet commemorates the opening of SIU women's gymnastics fourteen seasons ago on Nov. 22, 1963 when John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

SIU fielded it's first women's team against the "Chambana team was already on it's way to Carbondale when the tragedy was announced to the world, the competition was allowed to take place. The entire University, as well as the nation was in mourning.

Some 3,000 students watched the SIU women in action that night. Ever since, the women's team opens the season with the Kennedy Memorial Meet, remembering in action, the tragic event which marks the inception of women's gymnastics at SIU.

"The Battle of the Sexes," will give the fans a chance to see both teams in action before the regular season schedule gets rolling.

"We'll be on the road the next five weekends," Meade said, talking about the men's team. "This meet will give us a chance to see what we have."

"People who come out will see some good stuff," he added.

Meade's team is coming off a rebuilding season, but is considered a valid contender for an NCAA National title again this season.

The women's team holds the third position in the national preseason statistical ratings. Last season the team was hampered by illness and injury and finished with it's poorest dual match record, 8-2, and a fourth place finish at the 1976 AIAW National Championship.

The women's team is a perennial powerhouse in gymnastics and the fourth place finish was the worst in it's history.

Coach Vogel's record speaks for itself. He has 204 victories to six defeats, and 16 national team titles in his 20 years of collegiate coaching. Ten of those titles were earned in 13 seasons with SIU.

The women's team is anchored by Denise Didier, Cindy Moran, Beth Sheppard, Linda Nelson, Laura Hemberger, Kim Paul, Dianne Grayson, Jane Morava and LaRae Wilson.

The mens team, the opponent in "The Battle on the Sexes," will be anchored by seniors Steve Sheppard, Tony Hanson and Kim Wall and sophomores Kevin Muenz, Scott McBroom, and Rick Adams.

The meet will feature vaulting and floor exercise competition, and women's uneven bars vs. men's parallel bars and women's balance beam vs. men's pommel horse.

Fans will be allowed on the floor at the conclusion of the meet to take pictures and meet members of the teams.

Bowl committee leans toward Pitt for Orange Bowl

MIAMI (AP)—There's nearly a month remaining before college bowl committees can send out invitations, but Orange Bowl officials don't hide their desire to have second-ranked Pittsburgh for the New Year's night event.

Four Salukis rank among leaders in recent Valley statistic rankings

Andre Herrera ran rings around Northern Illinois Saturday, while SIU won 54-0, to improve both their rankings among Valley statistic leaders.

Drake beat West Texas State for its first win of the season in the only conference game played. Other games included Illinois State over Indiana State 24-14 (SIU plays Indiana State this weekend), North Texas State beat New Mexico State 25-14 and Memphis defeated Wichita State 31-0.

In the Drake win over West Texas, fullback Robert Forbes gained 90 yards on the ground as they won 34-14.

In statistics released Tuesday by The Valley, SIU's Andre Herrera not only took over the scoring lead, but moved 23 points in front of placekicker Steve Kroloff of Drake, who had the lead last week. Herrera's six touchdowns on Saturday gave him 62 points for the season.

Ken Seaman, with 31 points (5 field goals, 16 extra points), ranks fourth in scoring and second in kick scoring.

Herrera kept his lead in the Valley rushing contest. His 1,035 yards is 601 more than his nearest competitor and his 147.8 yards per game rushing average ranks him second in total offense.

Steve Mick has a 40.8 yards per punt average which places him third, and Kevin House ranks fifth in kickoff returns with a 19.6 yard average.

The Salukis are last in The Valley in passing offense with just 73.4

yards per game, but rank second in rushing because of Herrera.

Herrera's six touchdowns in sixth place with only 269 yards per game. Defensively the Salukis are rated fifth allowing 346.4 yards per game, giving up 248 yards on the ground (fifth best in The Valley) and 98.4 yards in the air (second best).

PAPER ALCHEMY

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Like the alchemists of the Middle Ages who attempted to turn iron into gold, the citizens of this city have been turning old newspapers into money. For the past seven years residents of Madison have been cooperating in a city-sponsored recycling drive.

According to the American Paper Institute, the organization that helped the city start its recycling program, Madison is like many American cities and towns that have discovered there is profit in recycling.

Herrera is the big name SIU football needs

Andre Herrera did it all last week. He set five SIU records, tied one and set one NCAA record. And the best achievement that he got came recently.

First, he was named to the UPI Backfield of the Week. Next, he was named the Valley Player of the Week (for the third time this year). And late Monday evening, the Associated Press named Herrera the Back of the Week in the nation.

Those honors place him in a category with such collegiate greats as O.J. Simpson, Jim Plunkett and Archie Griffin.

The only difference this time is that Herrera is from SIU.

One can only imagine what Herrera's performance means for the SIU football program.

What it probably means is that it will help bolster SIU's national recognition more than any other game in the 61-year history of SIU football.

Herrera sat out the last nine minutes of the game which could have been enough time for him to break the NCAA record for most yards in one game (350).

Most of the few hundred people who stuck out the rain-drenched game were disappointed in Coach Rey Dempsey's decision to remove Herrera. Some of them still can't figure out his reasoning.

"I promised myself a long time ago that I wouldn't do that type of thing—leave a player in a game just to get a record," Dempsey said.

He added that he didn't know how close his star

Korch on Sports

By Rick Korch
Sports Editor

runner was to the record, but that he might have kept him in the game had Herrera been "only five or 10 yards off" the record.

Dempsey added that he also wanted to get other players into the game. "We're trying to build a football program," he said.

But the main reason was that Herrera was hurting with a few minor injuries, some that he had going into the game.

"He could have got really busted up if I had left him in," Dempsey said. "It's too bad that he didn't get it. Maybe I made a mistake."

No coach, you didn't make a mistake.

It's easy to say it was a mistake, but what if Herrera had been injured? What then?

Also, it would be hard to cut down anything that Dempsey has done this year. He has already turned around the football program more in half a season than he was expected to do in two seasons. (And believe it or not, among the five Division I schools in the state, SIU now has the best record of them all.)

For Herrera, a game like Saturday's should assure him of getting drafted high in the NFL college player draft next February (if there is one). He may not go in the first round or two, but should be a cinch to be picked by the end of the third.

"I'd love to play pro football," Herrera said before practice Tuesday. "It's something that anybody would like to get into."

Since the season is still going on, he is trying to put any thoughts of being drafted out of his mind, but still admits, "I think about it because the scouts have been coming here since practice started."

"But I can't think about it too much or it'll affect my performance."

Everyone thought it would take a long time, and a lot of help to get the football team so much recognition, but little did everyone know that there was someone on campus who would do it so fast.

His name is Andre Herrera.

Cagers Ranked

In the first college basketball poll to come out this year, the Saluki basketball team is ranked 19th in the nation. The poll is by Popular Sports magazine.

The team will get an early test when it opens the season against 17th ranked Missouri on Nov. 26 in St. Louis.

Herrera still reaping honors

The recognition continues to pour in for Saluki tailback Andre Herrera.

By Tuesday afternoon, he had already been named the Valley Press Back of the Week part of and United Press International's Backfield of the Week.

Herrera's current statistics show him with 1,035 yards on 182 carries for an impressive 5.7 average per carry. He also has 10 touchdowns, and one-two point extra point for 62 total points.

After Saturday's performance, he is listed in the SIU record book in six categories, and is within close range of six others.

Of his records, two of them—most yards and touchdowns—would qualify as records in the Valley, but since SIU is not competing for the conference championship this year in football, the records will go into the book with an asterick, according to Valley Public Relations Director Gary Griffith.

Griffith also pointed out that Herrera is the first Valley player to achieve the Player of the Week award three times in one year.

Cagers open preseason with intrasquad game

By Rick Korch
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

The Saluki basketball preseason starts at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday with an intrasquad game at McLeansboro High School.

All the players on the team will play in the game, although two of them, senior forward Corky Abrams and freshman center Al Grant, have missed practice lately and may not play much.

Grant was hit by a virus last week and has missed practice since then, while Abrams had a tooth pulled Monday and didn't resume practice until Tuesday.

"Practice has been going well, but I'm disappointed that Al has missed the practice," Coach Paul Lambert said. "As a freshman, he has the most to learn."

Lambert didn't know the exact pairings of the teams yet, but said the game will consist of 20-minute halves. The team hasn't worked on out-of-bounds plays yet, so all plays will start from the side.

The game is the first of three intrasquad games to be played at Southern Illinois High Schools.

Three years ago, West Frankfort High School invited the team to play there, and Lambert has continued playing at high schools when invited.

Three women runners qualify for nationals

In a time trial held by the women's cross country team Monday at McAndrew Stadium, three runners qualified for the national meet to be held at the University of Wisconsin in Madison on Nov. 13.

Needing to run the three-mile course in less than nineteen minutes, Peggy Evans (18:37), Linda Shovak (18:50), and Cathy Chiarello (18:51) all made it, with Cindy Reuster (19:30) and Trish Grandis (19:05) just off the mark. Reuster and Grandis will get another chance to qualify Wednesday afternoon, since Saturday is the cutoff for submitting national times.

Coach Claudia Blackman was pleased with her team's effort, but was worried

"I thought they all had an outside chance, but you can't tell," said Blackman, "because sometimes the runners get cramps or get stiff."

Carol Anderson didn't finish the race because of a leg cramp, but Blackman is optimistic about her chances of making the cutoff, and has high hopes for Reuster and Grandis.

This Saturday the team travels to Southwest Missouri for the Ozark Invitational.

"It will be a real tough meet. We beat Southwest Missouri already this year, but the toughest competition will come from Kansas State University," Blackman said.
